Experience

Employment Law and Labor Relations

Amanda represents employers and labor unions in federal and appellate courts, in arbitrations, and in administrative proceedings before the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Hawaii Civil Rights Commission, and the Department of Labor. She has successfully defended national employer in case asserting racial and sexual harassment and wrongful termination claims against claims of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and whistleblowing. She has also achieved favorable decisions in union grievance arbitrations. Amanda frequently achieves complete dismissal of race discrimination, harassment, and retaliation claims for employers and industry employer in federal court. She has been ranked in Chambers & Partners USA in the area of Labor and Employment since 2015, in The Best Lawyers in America® since 2018, and Benchmark Litigation: Labor and Employment since 2021. Amanda was named the 2023 Best Lawyers® "Lawyer of the Year" in the category of Employment Law-Magazine in obtaining dismissal before trial of national origin discrimination and retaliation claims on behalf of a property management company in state court.

Amanda also has significant commercial litigation and arbitration experience. She has handled several cases involving lender liability and foreclosure-related matters, unfair and deceptive trade practices and unfair competition claims, intellectual property matters, partnership and real estate disputes, and labor arbitration proceedings, resulting in rulings affirming employment terminations for just cause.

Amanda grew up in Kaneohe and graduated summa cum laude from the William S. Richardson School of Law, where she served as Editor-in-Chief of the University of Hawaii Law Review. Prior to her legal career, Amanda was a news reporter and anchor for the ABC affiliate in Biloxi, Mississippi. She is a member of the Hawaii Bar, the National Employment Lawyers Association, and the National Labor Relations Board.
